

Blindness Uncovers.

The gray silky film fell slowly off my eyes

My sensitive blue eyes sting from the piercing light around me

My eyes slowly adjust to my surroundings

I look around me and my world is different

I finally can see

I can now see what's real and what's fake

I can see different colors

I see some yellow, blue, and green but I see a color I've never seen

Black, grey, and red

I can now see the death, blood, and tears of the world

The world I once called home is not the same anymore

As all the dark colors take over I still hold on to the yellows of the Earth